Your safety and the safety of all passengers and crew aboard the train is our number one priority.

Our engineer's primary responsibility is to operate the train safely and efficiently. While engineers are free to converse with you at their discretion, there are important duties they must attend to, without becoming distracted. Riders must carefully and completely follow all instructions from the engineer.

Climbing into the cab requires strength, balance and agility using both arms and both legs. Stairs are open metal grates. Steel decking surfaces may be slippery or uneven. The sensation of motion within the locomotive cab is different than aboard a passenger rail car.

Riders may find space in the locomotive compact and confining. Diesel fuel and exhaust fumes, horns, bells and mechanical noises are part of the sensory experience riders must be prepared for.

I understand and agree to the terms above.
